RGT Qualifications

By Ron Gletherow

The Registry of Guitar Tutors (RGT) has been established since 1992 as the foremost membership organisation for guitar teachers in Europe and many other countries across the world. RGT has a number of world-renowned musicians as patrons, including Paul McCartney, Ronnie Wood of The Rolling Stones and David Gilmour of Pink Floyd.

In association with its partnership organisation, London College of Music Examinations (one of the world's most respected music examination boards established in 1887) RGT organises highly successful graded examinations and diplomas in electric, acoustic, bass and classical guitar, and popular music theory, in Europe and many other countries around the world.

As of 2007 onwards RGT exams have been offered in the U.S. ' enabling U.S. guitar teachers to offer their students the chance to study for a guitar qualification that is recognised worldwide.

RGT exams are supported by a full range of comprehensive and carefully structured music education resources, including a series of exam handbooks that include everything necessary to study for each guitar exam. Amazon.com stock and distribute the entire range of RGT publications across the US.
